ST. CROIX STATE PARK is 15 miles east of Hinckley on State Highway 48. Park headquarters is on County Road 22 five miles south of the park entrance. Highway map index: L-13.

St. Croix State Park is the largest state park in Minnesota, with over 33,000 acres of forests, meadows, marshes, oak savanna and pine barrens host an impressive diversity of plant life. Recent resource management activities have been restored to several hundred acres. Visit the restoration areas along the bike trail and find prairie wildflowers like wood lily, blazing star, and western sunflower.

WILDLIFE
The park provides a refuge for an incredible diversity of species. Some of the most notable are tropical migrant birds like the scarlet-tanager and rose-breasted grosbeak, and uncommon species like Blandings’ turtles, wood turkeys, bullsnakes, and wolves. Also more common species like white-tailed deer, red and gray fox, black bear, and bald eagle. Visitors should keep food stored safely away from raccoons, skunk, fox, and bear.

HUMAN HISTORY
After the glacial period, about 5,000 years ago, Woodland Indians moved into the area. Their descendants, the Dakota, roamed here until the 1800s. At this point the Ojibwe Indians migrated from the east and took over the valley. The Ojibwe continued to live here until the 1900s. In the 1860s, French voyageurs arrived, working cooperatively with Indians trading beaver pelts and other furs for trade goods like iron pots, guns, fabric, and other modern conveniences. Trading posts were established along the river, including one here in the park.

Loggers arrived in the mid 1800s to harvest the plentiful red and white pine trees. St. John’s Landing logging camp utilized the river to float thousands of logs down the St. Croix River to St. Paul. Logging operations stopped on railroads, whose bed forms the majority of the entrance road.

The newly cleared land was attractive to farmers and immigrants, who settled the area and attempted to make it profitable farm land. Unfortunately, the soil was poor, and with the economic troubles of the Great Depression, most of these farms were failing by the 1930s. The New Deal brought a new hope to the area with the federal government’s sub-marginal lands recovery program. This program purchased tax delinquent properties and transformed them into recreational areas.

In 1935, 19,000 acres were purchased between $3 and $7 per acre. Park facilities were constructed by New Deal era work programs designed to give jobs to the unemployed. Hundreds of workers from the Civilian Conservation Corps, Works Progress Administration, and Veterans Conservation Corps lived, worked, and played here as they built one of the most extensive and successful Recreational Demonstration Areas in the country. Thanks to the lasting legacy of the CCC, St. Croix RDA is now a National Historic Landmark. In 1942, President Roosevelt turned the RDA, over to the state, and St. Croix became a state park.
