ABOUT THE PARK

In 1957, over 900 forested acres along the Brule River were set aside as Brule River State Park. In 1963, it was renamed as a memorial to the late Judge Magney. A lawyer, mayor of Duluth, and a justice of the Minnesota Supreme Court, he was a strong advocate of Minnesota State Parks, especially along the North Shore. Today, you can experience over 4,000 acres of rugged landscape in the park. Hike the trails, fish the waters or camp. The campground still holds the foundations of a 1934 camp that gave work and lodging to men during the Depression. Whatever your interest, enjoy the spectacular scenery during your stay.

Scenic landscape abounds at this park.
